The Bible says, “The desires of the diligent are satisfied,”1 and “Let us not grow weary of doing good, for in due season we will reap, if we do not give up.”2 You’ll probably find that most of your studies and daily responsibilities take consistency and diligence to see them through. When you find yourself needing to be consistent and diligent, you are learning something very important that will help you do a much better job and have more success in life.

You may often feel like walking away from your studies or responsibilities to do something more fun instead, but this will end up leaving you with more problems—you’ll get behind on your studies and your work will pile up, leaving you with a lot to catch up on.

There are some things that you might never “feel” like doing, and the only way you will get them done is to determine a time to do them and make the decision to get them done no matter how unappealing they seem.

For example, maybe you dislike studying a certain subject for your homework or you think it’s too difficult. But if you take time to study and complete your homework when it is assigned, then you’ll be ready for the next stage in those studies and won’t find yourself falling behind.

The next time you feel weary in your studies or responsibilities, remember that there is reward in consistency and diligence. If you see things through to the end, you will not only get them done, but you will feel happier and more successful.
